

Three great rReasons to go with Ducana tri-pane windows

If you're after maximum energy savings, substantial ecoEnergy government rebates and the utmost in added home comfort from your new or replacement windows tri-pane is the only way to go. According to Natural Resources Canada's Consumer's Guide To Buying Energy-Efficient Windows and Doors, you should choose high-performance CSA and Energy Star certified windows like Ducana's Diamond Series.

In their Consumer's Guide, the government devotes many pages to the scientifically proven advantages of high-performance triple pane windows like Ducana's. In their own words, "The technology of high-performance windows may be impressive, but the benefits are equally compelling. And these benefits extend beyond the obvious ones.

- Savings in Heating Costs
- Savings in Cooling Costs
- Increased Comfort
- Higher Humidity Without Condensation
- Lower Sound Transmission
- More Daylight
- Increased Passive Solar Potential.
- Reduced Mechanical Complexity."

Aside from energy savings, rebates and comfort, Diamond Series windows also offer major benefits like adding resale value and beauty to your home, reduced maintenance (no more scrubbing moldy window sills) and a healthier home thanks to reduced airborne dust and pollen. Nor to mention minimum noise pollution and condensation.

Some window manufactures recommend going with double rather than triple pane windows. These companies claim that the extra weight of the third pane of glass causes sagging and performance problems over time, especially on larger windows. They also claim that the extra pane causes heat convection which may distort visibility under strong sunlight conditions due gas movement inside the sealed panes.

Unlike Ducana, these companies do not offer steel reinforced sash rails and frames as well as super-duty hinges as standard equipment to easily handle the extra weight of tri-pane windows. Nor do they offer Krypton filled, hot-sealed, superior grade low-E glass to avoid convection issues. Most also do not offer a lifetime, transferable warranty.
